

I wish I could do this in the thief's shoes. But they'd probably be too big for me. Or would they? A familiar broad silhouette rolls past me, covered up and protected from the elements. Wonder where she's off to. Why do we say something is out in the elements? Does it mean earth, air, fire and water? The Greeks thought everything was made of atoms. But they didn't have one shred of physical evidence. Ladies and Gentlemen: the School of Pythagoras. Here's the school where they found all those elements. No idea how they do that. Where do they find them?
