

Making Contact With An Informant [EVENT]

Each participant at the event was be given a two-foot length of red ribbon and a unique slip of paper, which is one of the 177 sections of this document between triple hyphens. When all participants had these items, the following script was be read.

Welcome, trainees. In this PI training session, we will be practicing making contact with an undercover informant and covertly transferring information.

Each of you will be acting as both detective and informant. As a detective, in order to find your informant, you will be using pre-prepared signs and countersigns. You have your prompt, and someone else in the room has the proper response. Find that person who can respond to your prompt. At the same time, you have a response to another detective's prompt, and they will be looking for you. If you have found the correct informant, the shape below your prompt will match the shape above their response.

When you have found your informant, you and your informant should both grasp one side of your red ribbon, demonstrating that you have made contact. Keep hold of this ribbon until all detectives have found their informants!

Once all informants have been contacted, you should all determine the key to a productive collaboration.

Participants were then allowed to search for their two partners.
