

If you wanted everybody who is anybody, you can't complain when everybody shows up. That sheepish-looking man who's somehow spilling two martinis at once is a state senator. Guess he's taking happy hour seriously. And here's Silviu, looking like a lost sheep himself. Someone please tell him she doesn't care. Quite a contrast to the married couple over by the door. I'm guessing married: they are both wearing rings, and holding hands. How sweet. And she is resting her other hand ever so casually on a rather obvious baby bump, not in any way concealed by her high-waisted emerald gown. That gold necklace looks very simple, but you can tell it cost a bomb. I wonder if Peleus and Thetis will make an appearance? Now that would be appropriate.
